Story by Suzanne Sproul

Chuck Beck has been bitten by the Spyder. It isn't lethal, but it's expensive.

He's turned his love of sports cars into a profitable business. The Upland businessman said he is the only person in the world who produces replicas of the once-famous Porsche Type 550 Spyder. Only 90 original Spyderys were ever made.

The original cars had bodies made of thin aluminum and temperamental engines. "They were pure-bred race cars," he said.

Beck, however, said he has made the replicas "driveable." He said he wouldn't settle for cheap imitations, either.

Even someone knowledgeable about sports cars can be fooled by Beck's cars. The cost of the replicas is at least five times less than an original. A Beck car costs $5,500 unassembled or about $10,000 for a completely assembled one with accessories.

"The cars are toys for the people who have money," Beck said. "What is $10,000 and $15,000 for a toy nowadays."

Beck owns Beck Development, which is operated out of a small office at 1531 W. 13th St.

He produces and sells car kits for the vintage sports car. The kit includes an assembled body mounted on a duplicate of the car's original chassis.

The $5,500 gets a person a shell of the car. All extras such as windshields, headlights, tires and carpeting have to be added.

"We make most of the parts of the car. We build the body and frame but the hardware and the drive train is made from other manufacturers," Beck said.

Although sports car enthusiasts ranging from snow white to tangerine. The body has front and rear torsion housing welded to its chassis. Beck Development also sells car accessories. The cars are shipped to their owners by moving vans or boat. Some of the 35 Beck cars completed are in Europe and Japan as well as the United States.

The finished product is a 1,245-was driving a Spyder when the car crashed and he was killed.

Although Beck has driven most every kind of sports car, he was discharged from the U.S. Air Force with the idea of building 1964 Porsche 904s. He had difficulty in duplicating parts for the Porsche 904 so he decided to work with Spyderys.

"I literally grew up in the garage. I used to race cars but I got too old and too chicken," Beck said with a smile.

Beck's father also loved cars and he did some NASCAR racing. Beck usually spends 18 hours per day in his shop working on parts or individual cars. "It's either this or I have to go out and get a job."

He has one employee who helps but a lot of the work is done in various parts of the Upland area, he said. "I still go out to play with the cars, though," he said.

His wife, Jenny, helps with the bookkeeping.

Currently, the shop is producing one car a week and it has many back orders, Beck said. He's been in business for 18 months.

"I thought we'd be in business for about a year before we started making money. The first six months were slow but once people started finding out about us we got busy," he said. □ are quick to spot a Porsche, none of Beck's cars have the familiar emblem.

It usually takes 40 hours for an experienced mechanic to put the car together from the kit. "They're designed for ease and anyone can put it together, but it's easier for one who knows cars," Beck said.

Spyder enthusiasts can get their favorite car in a variety of colors pound roadster that brings back the day when Porsches traditionally won on the sports car circuit. The window to Beck's office has a painted sign touting the Vintage 550 Spyder: "The most famous racer of the 1950s. Drive a legend."

The car also has somewhat of an infamous reputation with some movie lovers. Actor James Dean

Jenny and Chuck Beck (left) both love sports cars and the family business. Each car designed by Beck Development has the company emblem on it (above). Porsche enthusiasts pay $5,500 for the framework of the famous vintage Spyder 550 (bottom left). Beck installs various accessories to the car frames if the owner prefers not to do the work (bottom right). Beck Development designs and builds replicas of the racing car of the 1950s, the Spyder 550. The car once was one of the top racers in the world.

Danny Gorczyca as Baptista, right, discusses his temperamental daughter with William Woo as Hortensio and Joshua Klein as Petruchio in the Sierra Vista production of "The Taming of the Shrew."

The bard comes to Sierra Vista school's gifted student class

By Suzanne Sproul

Advanced Sierra Vista School students tackled Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew" last week.

The students in Ann Diaz's gifted and talented education (GATE) program performed a condensed version of one of the bard's best comedies.

Third graders served as narrators and the four lead roles were performed by sixth graders in Mrs. Diaz's class.

The story centers around Petruchio who marries the headstrong Katharina. Petruchio sets out to tame her. He says in the play that he will change her "from a wild Kate to a Kate." By depriving her of food and sleep he ultimately succeeds and the once domineering Katharina becomes a docile wife.

The GATE class consists of children in the third through sixth grade who have scored high on intelligence tests, Mrs. Diaz said.

The group has spent the past month studying Shakespeare and learning its lines for the 45-minute production. The group also attended a performance of the same production by the Oregon Shakespeare Festival when the company was in Upland.

"The children in my class are so bright that they need more instruction above and beyond what they already receive in the classroom," the teacher said.

The children attend their regular classes in addition to their GATE instruction.

The actors were Katharina, Peggy Munoz; Petruchio, Joshua Klein; Hortensio, William Woo; and Baptista, Danny Gorczyca. □

Retirees get some holiday cheer

By Suzanne Sproul

Members of the Regional Occupational Program's child care class in Upland helped spread a little Christmas cheer last week at the Shay Retirement Home.

Ten students involved in the program and some Upland preschoolers gave the people at the home handmade colorful place mats. The group also sang Christmas carols.

Lisa Vadnais, class instructor, said her students decided this year not to have a traditional Christmas party at the end of the semester's instruction. Instead the girls decided to visit the retirement home.

The vocational-technical class involves child care instruction. The girls spend one month in the classroom learning basic child care techniques and then they spend time at various child care centers in the Upland area. Some of the girls are working at teacher aides, at infant care centers and at facilities for the handicapped.

The girls, who are from Upland, Etiwanda and Alta Loma high schools, earn credit for the course.

After the students' visit to Shay, they had cookies and punch, according to Mrs. Vadnais.

Love Boat sets sail for some exotic ports

By Philip Sousa
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — If not in heaven, you could say it's a mating made in Hollywood.

The parties involved: The most famous ship in the world and San Diego, which bills itself as America's finest city. The purpose: To offer a series of weeklong voyages to Mexico worth noting because of their unique features and value.

After years of frequent travel at home and abroad, it has become obvious to me that no other cruise liner in service these days is as well known as the "Love Boat" of television fame.

From Argentina to Japan, from Yugoslavia to Australia, and everywhere in between, I've often spotted locals glued to their TV sets whenever an episode of the series was on. At least twice during a visit to the Orient a few months ago, hotel maids lingered in my room so as to catch the show.

Excellent service and a casually elegant atmosphere keynote Princess Cruises' original "Love Boat" — the Pacific Princess.

But that also applies to the line's three other ships, and thus why two of them — Island Princess and Sun Princess — have the same nickname. The newest member of the family — a mint-new 45,000-ton state-of-the-art dazzler officially known as Royal Princess — got its apt "Super Love Boat" tag even before its christening recently by Princess Diana of England.

However, it's the original TV star — freshly refurbished from top to bottom — that will be doing those Mexican voyages from its new home port, San Diego.

January through early April, the 650-passenger ship will sail every Saturday on seven-day voyages along the Mexican Riviera with calls at Puerto Vallarta, Mazatlan and, sea conditions permitting, Cabo San Lucas. That will be followed by a series of Mediterranean cruises after which Pacific Princess will return here for the 1986 winter season.

Everyone who ever cast eyes on it, Queen Elizabeth included, has rated San Diego as one of the world's most beautiful ports.

But there's more to it than scenery.

Some of the factors that makes these cruises unique would include the location of both the city and its port. The cruise terminal sits only a few blocks from downtown and Interstate 5, which means easy access from any direction. And San Diego itself lies a half nautical day closer to Mexico than Los Angeles — a full day roundtrip — which adds up to more time south of the border for the passengers and fuel savings for the ship.

These factors are particularly beneficial to passengers originating in San Francisco, Phoenix, Denver, Chicago and other major cities with direct air service to San Diego.

For such travelers, San Diego Councilman Bill Cleator notes, this is virtually a hassle-free city.

"Our airport is just five minutes down Harbor Drive from the B Street Pier cruise terminal and the train station is two blocks away," he adds. "And so is the downtown business hub and such major attractions as the San Diego Zoo, Seaport Village and Balboa Park."

As to the matter of value, consider that the published rates for these decidedly upscale journeys range from around $1,400 for a twin-bedded inside stateroom to about $3,000 for a deluxe outside suite; that's per person and based on double occupancy. Considering what you get in return — and we'll take a look at that in a moment — it adds up to a rather good investment you'd be unlikely to match were you to spend the same length of time at an equally posh resort on land.

But Princess Cruises has made a good deal even better.

Celebrating its 20th anniversary in 1985, the line has introduced what it calls a "Jubilee" promotion that will offer substantial savings on its winter and spring sailings to the Mexican Riviera: On all seven-day round-trip cruises from San Diego — except the inaugural voyage on Jan. 12 which is practically sold out — passengers will receive a discount of $800 per couple or $400 per person on their fares. Departure dates are Jan. 19 and 26; Feb. 2, 9, 16 and 23; March 2, 9, 16, 23 and 30; April 6; and Dec. 21 and 28, 1985.

Incidentally, the reductions are also available on all week-long sailings between Los Angeles and Acapulco on Island Princess; ports of calls for these are Puerto Vallarta, Mazatlan and Zihuatanejo/Ixtapa, and of course Acapulco.

The offer applies to all stateroom categories and includes free or low air add-on for passengers flying in to either San Diego or Los Angeles from major gateway cities across the country.

At most originating and terminating ports, Princess passengers may take advantage of reasonably priced land packages before or after their cruise.

The Acapulco package, for instance, is priced from $79 per person, double occupancy, and includes two nights at either of two beachfront hotels — the Acapulco Plaza or the Hyatt Regency — as well as lunch prior to boarding the ship on sailing day. Others are available in San Diego, featuring the line's own hotel here, the Vacation Village Resort on Mission Bay; Vancouver, British Columbia; San Juan, Puerto Rico; San Francisco; Athens; London, and Lisbon.

For those wishing to extend their sea holiday to two weeks, Princess is offering another bargain aboard Island Princess: you get an extra week aboard for only $500 per person by sailing roundtrip from Los Angeles. This applies to all room categories except suites and deluxe singles.

Another great value worth noting: On all the line's cruises

Couple shares love of leather working

By Terri Tirella

Two Upland residents are reviving the art of leather tooling.

"It's an art that goes back a long way," said Bob Mercer, who along with his partner Lydia Ryan, has hand-tooled leather products for six years.

The couple stumbled on to the hobby/business after they were unable to find a leather belt with a design they liked.

"So we got a blank belt and made one ourselves. We've been learning more or less on our own."

Mercer said he and Ryan don't tool leather the conventional way. "If you took a book on how to do it you'd probably see us doing it backwards."

Mercer said he and Ryan's work differs from what one might find in a department store. "We chisel a design into leather, not use a stamp tool with a picture on it," he said. "You can find a lot of stamped leather around ... but we've found only one or two other people who do it (tool leather)."

"I don't know if it's an art or

Lydia Ryan and Bill Mercer do leather tooling in their Upland home. Their business, which started as a hobby, has taken them throughout the west to art shows and craft fairs.

a craft," Mercer said. "The drawing part on leather is an art."

The couple have a room in their home reserved for their leather work, including a table lined with tools and they work across the table from one another, filling most of their evenings and weekends with their hobby-turned-business.

Ryan does a lot of drawing on the leather, "because that's the part I like to do." But both do cutting, tooling and dyeing. They've shared their business for five years, but it's a part-time effort for Mercer, who has worked for General Telephone Company 17 years.

"We work about five hours on weekdays and 10 to 14 on weekends," Mercer said. "If we have a big order, we'll work until 1 or 2 a.m. every night and she'll (Ryan) work all day cutting."

The couple uses unborn calf skin, snake and lizard skin and suede to make lighter covers, cigarette cases, belts, purses, pictures, belt buckles, knife pouches "just about anything." They also do custom work and have been commissioned to do seat covers and a desk cover to help restore antiques.

"It's fun and new things are always fun," Ryan said. "We get real excited when working with a new idea or new design."

The tooling can be time consuming. "First we have to soften the leather, to make it pliable," Mercer said. Then he works with the leather tools to raise one part of the leather, making an almost hand-carved look on the material.

They can dye the leather and make it buckskin, a medium brown, black or dark brown. They may even "antique" an item, by allowing the dye to settle on certain areas, highlighting the leather.

In addition to showing their work in malls, at fairs, local stores, sports centers and expositions throughout the Western states, they supply merchandise to mail order companies.

They've also displayed their leather goods at Upland Memorial Park on Saturdays and Sundays, when their schedules permitted.

In handtooled leather crafting, the artisan raises and lowers portions of the leather, using the contrast to form images.

PHOTO TIPS

By Holt Confer
Copley News Service

Recently I had the opportunity to work with a Hasselblad for a while. I suppose I shouldn't be so flip with the name of a camera I've known for such a short time, but then again it seems as though it's an old friend.

Any new camera takes a bit of getting used to, but going from 35mm to 2 1/4 is a bit strange. But not quite as different as I thought it might be. After a few rolls of film, I found myself quite comfortable with the square format and with a new viewing technique.

Also, I was determined to follow the advice I've been giving you all this time: Whenever you get a new piece of equipment, take the time to read the owner's manual.

I get to work with a lot of different cameras and most of them, I suspect, I could pick up and begin to use with only minor glitches. But each camera has subtle differences, differences that are usually highlighted in the owner's manual. If you don't read that important bit of documentation, chances are some operating or performance features of that new camera are being overlooked.

The 500 CM was set up for taking 12 pictures from a roll of 120 film. From the stock of 120 film I've been seeing in most of the camera stores, finding more than a few rolls in any one place — at least in the smaller communities — just might be a problem. But not an insurmountable problem, and certainly not enough of a problem to keep anyone from being a Hasselblad owner.

Incidentally, the 500 CM was introduced originally back in 1969 — obviously planned obsolescence isn't a part of the manufacturer's thinking.

After the unfamiliar got to be familiar, I started realizing just how simple operating a Hasselblad really is. Remember, on this particular model, there was no through-the-lens metering ... but that wasn't the problem for me since through-the-lens metering is something I rarely use even when it's available. But in spite of a lack of electronic bells and whistles, Victor Hasselblad designed a camera that works well for serious photographers.

There are a lot of built-in safeguards, such as not being able to remove the film holding the camera back until the darkslide is inserted; on the other hand, you can't make an exposure with the darkslide in place. Two colored signal dots — one on the film holder, one on the camera — tell the photographer whether or not the camera is ready for the next

STAMPS

By Lea Blauvelt
Copley News Service

Sweden released on Nov. 29 a five-stamp set symbolizing the work of five Nobel Prize winners in physiology or medicine, according to the Swedish Post Office. The stamps were all 2.70-kronor in value and are in seven strips for booklets.

Martin Morck engraved the stamps from designs by Urban Frank and Nils Peterson.

The first stamp honors George von Bekesy of the United States, who won the 1961 prize for his discoveries showing how sound is transformed into electrical impulses in the inner ear.

The second stamp demonstrates how nerve cells are activated and checked — the work of John Eccles of Australia and Alan Hodgkin and Andrew Huxley of Britain, who shared the 1963 prize.

The 1970 prize was shared by Julius Axelrod of the United States, Bernard Katz of Britain and Ulf von Euler of Sweden. They shared the discovery of the mechanisms whereby nerve cells store, release and break down signal substances.

The 1981 prize is illustrated on the fourth stamp. It was won by Roger Sperry of the United States, who demonstrated the important functional differences between the two halves of the brain.

And the fifth stamp salutes the work of David Hubel (United States) and Torsten Wiesel (Sweden), who took the 1981 prizes for their work on the information processing in the system of vision.

The five stamps picture an inner ear, a nerve, a cell, the brain and the eye, respectively.

NEWS FROM AND ABOUT SCOTT — The 1985 Scott's "U.S.

Specialized Catalogue" has been released. It reflects almost 15,000 price changes this year in the stamps of the United States, its possessions, the Confederate States and the United Nations.

To sort out the jumble of lettered majors and minors, the U.S. Transportation coils, starting with No. 1896, have had new numbers assigned to them. And the U.S. air post pages have been revamped to accommodate the ongoing computerization of the catalog. First-day cover prices for these stamps now are listed separately.

Among the many price changes, many of the encased postage stamps and the revenues of the U.S. revised upward.

The catalog, plus other Scott ones, can be found at most stamp dealers and some bookshops. It is priced at $20, but if you check your Linn's Stamp News's or Stamp Collector's discount house ads, you can save from 20 percent to 30 percent. (Both papers usually are available in public libraries.)

The stamp world has been surprised by the announcement that Collectibles Co., publishers of the Scott catalogs, has been sold to Amos Press. The Scott firm had been in business since 1863.

The Amos Press, publishers of Linn's Stamp News, Coin World, Cars and Parts and the Sidney Daily News, plans to move the Scott operations from New York to Sydney, Ohio. In a news release, the Amos Press announced that it will discontinue The Scott Auction Galleries, but will continue to produce Scott album pages for all stamps of the world.

Furthermore, it promises to resurrect the entire line of Scott album pages. The Scott Co. has been criticized for not emphasizing the publication of pages for its albums. Amos Press plans to bring those albums up-to-date.

The Amos Press also purchased the Scott numbering system, which is used by most collectors and dealers in the United States.

The Scott Co. was founded in 1863 by John Walter Scott. He published his first price list — it evolved into the catalogs — that year. In 1868 Scott published its first stamp album (American) and conducted its first stamp auction in 1870.

HERE AND THERE — Oklahoma artist Gerald Mobley won the 1985-86 federal duck stamp contest with his watercolor design of a lone male cinnamon teal. His was one of more than 1,500 entries.

Community activist works from within system

By Josie Garza

Community activism is a part of Nacho Gracia.

After serving several years on Rancho Cucamonga's citizens advisory commission, Gracia, 48, recently received a commendation for his community service from the city council.

Following the presentation, which marked his stepping down from the commission due to conflicts with his work schedule, Gracia said he plans to continue in his other community activities.

Gracia's other activities include serving as chairman of the Citizens Participation Advisory Committee and as vice-president of the local chapter of the Sociedad Progresista Mexicana. Both are based in North Town.

The 26-year resident of North Town said his interest in community service was sparked during the 1960s, prior to Rancho Cucamonga's incorporation as a city. He started by attending the meetings of the Cucamonga School District Board of Trustees.

He said his involvement at school district trustee meetings later led to his involvement with the Citizens Participation Advisory Committee.

Gracia said by attending the school district meetings he got to know other North Town residents who were concerned about the small community.

Some of the North Town residents formed the committee in 1975 when federal Community Development Block Grant funds were made available.

The committee was involved in an advisory capacity in all phases of planning such Community Block Grant-funded projects as the Cucamonga Neighborhood Center and the placement of sidewalks in North Town.

Today, the committee is working to get a city park in North Town.

"We're no different from the rest of the city. They've (other city residents have) been trying to get parks in their areas. We've been trying to get a park since 1975," said Gracia.

Born and reared in Guasti, Gracia said he decided to settle in North Town after he married the former Lollie Montecino in 1956. North Town was where Lollie had grown up.

The couple met while Gracia was a high school student and Lollie was a student at a local junior high school.

At the time of their marriage, Gracia was on leave from the Army. When he returned home after his service, the Gracias made their first home together in North Town.

Today, the Gracias have three sons and four grandchildren.

Soon after they were married, Gracia said he told his wife that he wanted to "stay in one place" when they reared their children.

Gracia said he didn't want to rear their children while moving from place to place as his family did in his youth. His family had moved with his father and grandfather as they followed the trail of agricultural work.

ENTERTAINMENT & DINING GUIDE

Thirsty for good reading? Try wine books

By Dan Berger
Copley News Service

Demand for wine knowledge is increasing everywhere. Wine classes are being offered by university extension departments; restaurants and wine shops now routinely offer wine seminars, and public wine tastings are selling out rapidly.

And more books on wine are hitting the shelves than ever before. This year alone, some three dozen new books on the subject have been released in the United States. It seems like everyone wants to write a wine book.

This week I'll review three of the latest, ranking them on a scale of 1 to 10, with 10 being tops.

"The University of California/Sotheby Book of California Wine," $65.

This is, quite simply, one of the best books on wine ever written. Edited by Dr. Maynard Amerine, Bob Thompson and Doris Muscatine, it offers the views and research of 44 writers on so many arcane subjects you'll never get bored.

For the historian, there are nine separate pieces on various aspects of California's wine past; for those interested in growing grapes, five essays; there are 11 different discussions of grape varieties, seven sections on wine making and toward the end of the book a most significant finish: various methods to evaluate fine wines — and methods to evaluate the evaluators.

In that last section, Thompson sets a new standard of quality in dissecting wines and how they are — and should be — viewed.

Thompson is probably the most cogent wine writer in California today, and his clear and precise approach to evaluation is a remarkable distillation of knowledge. The author of the now out-of-print (alas) "California Wine Book," Thompson also has a chapter on vintages, and it is one of the finest discussions of the topic I have seen.

Yet the book is filled with other gems: Roy Brady (a longtime wine writer and label collector) on collecting wine labels and on some of the state's vinous history; University of California economist Kirby Moulton on the economics of wine in California; Sacramento merchant Darrell Corti (who may know more about his subject than any man alive) on dessert wines; sections on the medical and therapeutic values of wine, wine with food, sensory evaluation and more.

In 615 pages, there are good maps and illustrations, but few photos. However, this large tome is not for browsing. It's for reading, and it's handsomely done.

In all honesty, I admit that I contributed two tiny sections to this book, but I receive no profit from any sales of it.

On a scale of 1 to 10, the book rates a 9.

"Encyclopedia of American Wine," by William I. Kaufman; Tarcher/Houghton Mifflin; $23.95.

This curious melange has some nice touches, yet appears to me to be a first draft in need of some revisions.

Kaufman, a multifaceted travel-music-TV writer as well as wine author, has written an A to Z on the subject of wine in the United States, and he is at his best when dealing with the people involved in the making of the wine. Many wine makers are given the credit they are due; many get brief biographies. Few wine books ever mention the wine makers.

Also, the many maps are enlightening, and some of the odd wine labels illustrated in the book are fun to see.

Yet nearly one-fourth of the 564-page book is devoted to reprinting the results of various wine competitions that mostly mention wines long since off store shelves.

Also, there are curious lapses. For example, no mention of Bill Bonetti, the great wine maker at Soverain who is now at Sonoma Cutrer; no mention of the great feud between Robert and Peter Mondavi when both were at the Charles Krug Winery, and no mention of Sterling-Newton-Shaw wine maker Ric Forman.

Moreover, the historical material in this work has been covered with greater thoroughness by Leon Adams in "The Wines of America."

Overall, Kaufman's book is a good effort, but with a number of problems. Rated 6.

"Terry Robards' New Book of Wine," Putnam; $19.95.

The former New York Times wine columnist has updated his "New York Times Book of Wine," published in 1976, but some of the updating needs updating.

Robards says in the introduction that this book is for the lay reader who is making a first step into wine. Yet Robards shows an abiding fascination with how long wines will live in a cellar — which certainly is a consideration only for serious collectors.

Moreover, Robards makes some rather arbitrary comments about pricing. And his love for French wine (and lack of esteem for California wine by comparison) is obvious.

Robards does offer interesting comments about many wines and wine subjects (I liked the excellent sections on champagne, and on labels and wine laws), but a number of explanations seem overdone and almost precious.

In his introduction, Robards gives credit to wine author Alexis Lichine for his contributions to the wine literature. Yet it is "Alexis Lichine's New Encyclopedia of Wines & Spirits" (Knopf, $29.95) that is the better of the two books.

Beyond both, however, "Hugh Johnson's Modern Encyclopedia of Wine" (Simon and Schuster, $29.95) is the best of the three.

The Robards book rates a 6.

In traffic (above) Rancho Cucamonga resident Charles McLane's Metropolitan is often overtowered by trucks and motor homes. In his driveway (top center) McClane keeps his fleet in full view of passing motorists on Archibald Avenue. The pudgy little Metropolitan (right) is as sturdy as it is economical, getting 35 to 40 miles per gallon. McLane's traveling car was built in 1962 (top right), two years before the Metropolitan was phased out of production.

Cute

In 1954 a pudgy little British import rolled off ship ramps onto American streets to begin its rivalry with the ever-popular Volkswagen Bug.

It wasn't classically styled, but its look was clean. Not streamlined, but smooth and bulbous.

The Nash Metropolitan was a popular compact of the 1950s and 1960s, and one of the few cars to be overshadowed by the Volkswagen Bug in size as well as sales.

During its years of production, Charles McLane, a Minnesota railroad worker, was fond of the little cars, but could not afford to buy one.

Today, McLane, now a Rancho Cucamonga resident, owns a fleet of Metropolitans.

"I wanted something to play around with," he says, recalling his search for the cars that began nearly a decade ago.

The Metropolitan had been driven out of production in 1964, when the big three auto makers flooded the market with compacts. But McLane found his first Metropolitan in a Chino pasture where the cows and horses had feasted on its upholstery. Its faded paint and pitted chrome betrayed its age, yet he took it home and got it running.

After buying the car, he found another, bought it, and repeated the process often enough to acquire a eight Metropolitans, which now line his property on Archibald Avenue.

Passing motorists who see McLane's Metropolitans, most rusting away in his side yard, must wonder why someone would turn his home into a showcase for the tiny vehicles.

"It's like collecting stamps and coins," said McLane, comparing his cars to his other two hobbies.

It was the pure and basic design of the Metropolitan that caught his fancy. "I like the simplicity of the engine," he says with enthusiasm. "You can just pull it right out, set it on a bench and tear it down."

McLane finds purpose in his pleasure by keeping one or two of the cars working and driving them where ever he goes.

About 95,000 Metropolitans were sold between 1954 and 1962. "They were ahead of their time," says McLane, explaining that the cars were built sturdy with heavy metal, yet got about 35 to 40 miles per gallon.

In 1956 the asking price was about $1,527 for a hardtop and $1,551 for a convertible.

The prototype for the car, called the NXI (Nash Experimental International), was displayed by former AMC President and Republican presidential candidate George Romney in private showings in 1950.

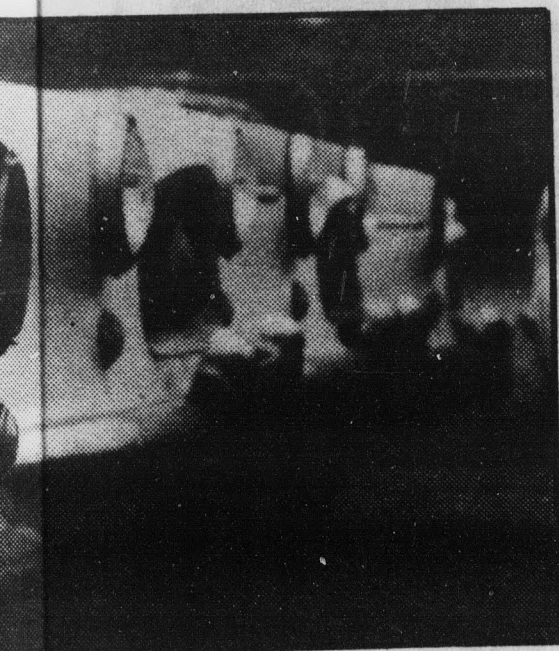

In its early years of production the car was embellished with an oval grill bearing the Nash label and a fake hood scoop. But the scoop looked silly on an economy car and was later dropped.

On its 85-inch wheelbase, the Metropolitan was the smallest car sold by a domestic franchise during its production period, according to Consumer's Guide. However, its design posed problems because the trunk was only accessible by folding down the rear seat. Later, a trunk hood was added.

On the road, McLane wears a sporty traveling cap, and drives past trucks and trailers that tower over his blue and white Met.

"You either like them or hate them," he says, pauses for a moment and smiles. "I like them."

shot. If both dots are white, go ahead and shoot; but if the film holder dot is red, the film hasn't been advanced; if the camera body dot is red, the shutter hasn't been cocked.

You see, most Hasselblad users have several backs for their camera, making it very easy to change from one type of film to another. Since it's not only possible, but common practice to load the film backs when they aren't attached to the camera, the double dot system is an ideal way to alert the photographer to the condition of both his recently attached film pack and his camera.

Those interchangeable film cartridges give the photographer a couple other "gee whiz"-type advantages — for example, it's possible to switch from 120 film to 200 film or even snap in a 70mm long roll film magazine. It's also possible, at any time, to replace the magazine with a Polaroid back — handy for double-checking both composition and exposure data.

Of course, there's much, much more I could tell you about Hasselblad cameras, but there's one point I think needs a word or two before I close this week's column. Since you probably get to see few Hasselblads at work (they aren't quite as common as 35mm cameras), chances are you're thinking the company hasn't treated a full photographic system for Hasselblad users. When you see just how many different lenses, the filters (incidentally, with a special adapter, my favorite Cokin filters can be used on a Hasselblad), the underwater units, close-up attachments, photomicrographic lenses and on and on, you'll realize the Hasselblad owner is far from disadvantaged.

In fact, don't be surprised if he has a bit of a professional edge.

Gracia said another thing that keeps him in North Town is that there's still a need to work with his fellow committee members to make more improvements in the community.

"We haven't been really radical. We've tried to work within the system," he said.

"I've learned if you're going to plan a project with a government agency, this is going to drag on for many years."

And Gracia added that he and the committee are willing to wait for things that'll improve their community. □

Love Boat sets sail for exotic ports-of-call for 1985 you can bring along a third person in a stateroom with available accommodations and pay only half of the minimum rate.

When earlier I mentioned the subject of return for your investment, I had in mind not merely what's included in your cruise rate but also the quality of what you get. And having sailed with Princess several times over the years, I confidently rate on-board service and facilities as top-notch.

As would be expected, the type of stateroom selected determines the rate you'll pay. However, regardless of ship chosen and fare paid, your Princess cruise would include:

First-class accommodations with private bathroom and shower — deluxe rooms and suites also have tub baths; telephone; multichannel music system; individually controlled air-conditioning, and wall-to-wall carpeting.

All meals, including breakfast, lunch and dinner in the dining room, selected from menus whose wide array of treats you'll seldom if ever find at a resort on land; also breakfast and luncheon buffets on deck every day for those seeking a more casual setting or lighter fare; of course, lavish midnight buffets nightly.

Nightly entertainment on these liners will remind you of Vegas and Broadway. And the reason is the shows, guest entertainers, comedians and other performers featured every night are as professional as the choreography, the costumes and the music.

On-board activities also are yours at no extra charge. These would include dance and exercise classes, bridge and backgammon instruction, port and special interest lectures, gym facilities, shuffleboard and pingpong.

The seven-day air/land/sea holidays are priced from $819 per person, based on double occupancy, and feature two itineraries between San Diego and Puerto Vallarta.

Departing from San Diego, you cruise three nights to Puerto Vallarta for a four-night stay at the Buganvillas Sheraton Hotel, or similar, before flying home. With the other option, you fly to Vallarta for a three-night stay, and then spend four nights aboard Pacific Princess en route to San Diego with a call at Mazatlan. Package rates include cruise, hotel and transfers at Puerto Vallarta. Air transportation is included for Southern California passengers, while those from elsewhere in the country pay a nominal add-on charge.

Heart attack can't stop Gessig from coaching

By Charles Bentley

Pressure. It's part of the job for all coaches.

From the manager of a church league softball team to the head coach of the Los Angeles Raiders, there is some amount of pressure involved in being a coach.

Because of the stress, it isn't surprising that coaches quit. Burnout is a real threat.

That's what makes the situation surrounding the Upland High School girls soccer program a fascinating study.

The Upland girls program is good; The Highlanders field competitive teams from a pool of talent as deep as any around Southern California. The local youth soccer programs have seen to that.

Because of the talent, the coaching spot is a hot responsibility. In the fifth year of girls soccer at Upland, the Highlanders are under their fifth head coach.

Andy Gessig had impressive credentials when he applied for the position. Ten years of coaching experience with various local youth soccer programs, not to mention his coaching work in other youth sports, made him very attractive.

But the day he was told he'd gotten the coaching spot, Gessig suffered a heart attack.

"That had nothing to do with it," Gessig says with a laugh. "There's no relation between the attack and me getting the job. Just one of those things."

Andy Gessig is happy and willing to joke about it all right now. Anyone who has been through the physical problems he has the last few months would be happy to joke about anything.

On Sept. 24, Gessig had the attack and was hospitalized for 11 days. Then, the day before Thanksgiving, he went back in for a double-bypass operation.

"They took a stress test and found I wasn't getting enough blood through my system," he recalls. "Actually I was lucky. When they did the operation, they found over 50 percent of another blocked. I was very lucky the attack wasn't a total disaster."

Yet, in less than a month, Gessig is not only out of the hospital, he's back on the sidelines, with his doctor's blessings.

"He (Dr. Brown) has been behind me all the way. He's restricted me in some ways, be he was all for me getting around and back into the job as soon as possible," explains Gessig. "He thinks — and I know — it's good medicine for me. He told me when I could sit on the sidelines, said there would be no problem as long as the weather was good. It's a question of using my head."

'I can see the changes it's making in me. I don't see myself being nearly as aggressive on the sidelines. Before, I tended to get caught up in the game, and I missed things. Now I sit back and observe.'

And it's not like Gessig is up on his feet, going nose-to-nose with the officials on every call.

Not yet, at least.

He has just been given permission to walk the sidelines. Before, he was sitting, with assistant Debbie Cavion doing the pacing.

How has it affected the team? The Highlanders won their first five games before losing 3-0 to Torrance, the top-ranked team in CIF, in the finals of the prestigious South Torrance Tournament.

"I have to credit two people for a big part of our success. Debbie Cavion took over when I had the attack, and has been the one in charge of things since then. I can't say enough about her, how she's done everything I've asked and more," says the Upland coach. "She and our junior varsity coach, Raul Guerra, they've both done excellent jobs to keep things rolling."

"He did the hard part," says Cavion, a junior at Cal Poly Pomona. "He selected the team. I'm just running them through their paces. We've talked a great deal about what we want to do, and for the most part we agree."

"It's the fact that we work smoothly together, that's helped so much. The kids have been super, never a question or problem. They listen to me and go do what we need them to do."

But is there any friction?

"There's no question he's the head coach," Cavion asserts. "I'm just helping out as best I can."

It takes more than just a willing assistant stepping in to keep a program running. One thing Gessig is quick to point out is that there's never been a question as to whether he should step down.

"I've had nothing but support from the people at Upland," he says. "The principal, Glenn Fisher, and the athletic director, Pete Raesbeck, have been behind me ever since I had the attack. They both told me to take all the time I needed, that the job was still mine and would be waiting for me when I was ready. That kind of confidence is important."

But while a big part of the burden has fallen on Gessig and Cavion, the play of the athletes is the true proof of the pudding.

"The kids have been doing a super job. They were concerned after the attack, and they were really worried and upset about the surgery," Gessig says. "I explained everything. I talked with my team leaders, told them what I needed and expected of them. When I got back, those leaders were out there doing the job. You can tell. Heck, we could easily be 3-3 as 5-1. It's the kids that have made the adjustments, and they're getting the rewards right now."

"We've got five seniors, and only three of those are starters. Only two have had varsity experience before this year. I look to those seniors for leadership, whether they're on the field or on the bench," he adds. "Spirit. Morale. We need those things on the team, and we've gotten them. These kids just have a super attitude."

Anyone who goes through such an ordeal talks of the changes it makes. Gessig had been a successful coach on the youth level, putting together competitive teams every season. But will he be the same kind of coach he was then?

Does he want to be?

"I can see the changes it's making in me. I don't see myself being nearly as aggressive on the sidelines," admits the first-year Upland coach. "Before, I tended to get caught up in the game, and I missed things. Now I sit back and observe."

"I'm more patient. I don't let the little things bother me.

I see things changing in my day-to-day life. Something like this, it has to change you. You begin to enjoy life, take pleasure in everything you do."

Despite the early success, there is still a long season ahead for the Highlanders. Both Alta Loma and Claremont look to challenge Upland for top spot in the Baseline League this year. And the other teams are of such a quality that there won't be any room for playing below potential.

"This team still has a lot to learn, a lot of improving and maturing to do. We can't just sit back and be happy with what we've done so far," adds Cavion. "This team has a lot of potential, but it has to continue to grow. If we can do that, then I think we can beat teams like Torrance when we see them again in the playoffs. But this league is too strong for us to expect to step right into the playoffs. We've got a lot of work still to do."

COINS

By Gary L. Palmer
Copley News Service

When it comes to buying and selling coins, there is a big difference in pricing. Were you to wander into a coin shop trying to sell a nearly perfect 1937 three-legged Buffalo nickel, you could expect to be offered in the vicinity of $450 for it.

If, on the other hand, you went into a coin shop seeking to purchase that nickel, in the same condition, you probably would pay about $1,100.

That is the easiest way to describe the difference between the hobby's two premier pricing guides, "A Guidebook of United States Coins," better known as the Red Book, and "Handbook of United States Coins," designated as the Blue Book.

And now it is time again for the latest Blue Book, the 1985 version, with its complete list of all U.S. coins ever struck, mintage figures and pricing information. Prices you might expect to realize when selling coins to dealers.

The numbers are not by any means hard and fast, but they do portray fairly accurately what one can expect to receive as the seller in a coin transaction with a hobby professional.

The 1985 edition is the 42nd of the renowned Blue Book, originally begun in 1942 by R.S. Yeoman to accommodate the needs of a new generation of numismatists who had become fascinated with collecting through the introduction of coin collecting boards.

At that time there was no single pricing guide or catalog of U.S. coins with concise, pertinent information.

That 1942 Blue Book was the first publication to provide accurate listings of mintage figures, values and availability of coins. The book was well received and an annual tradition was born.

The '85 edition adds a number of newly discovered varieties as well as clearer versions of many illustrations.

The '84 Blue Book was the first with a soft cover and the new edition continues that trend. The book is priced at a modest $3.95 and is available at most coin, hobby and book stores.

I would urge anybody selling coins to dealers to use this book as a reference — particularly the non-collector.

It will quickly put in perspective what are too often grandiose expectations of becoming rich through the sale of a few old coins.

Canadian coin collecting enthusiasts may be interested in "Striking Impressions," a book about the history of the Royal Canadian Mint.

Written by Dr. James Haxby, the 289-page hardcover book features a number of full-color illustrations and text complete through 1983, the 75th anniversary.

Chaffey high is 'adopted' by Sunkist as part of program

As a part of the Adopt-A-School Program, Sunkist Growers Inc., of Ontario, has adopted Chaffey High School, according to Sunkist operations manager Robert W. Eldridge and Dr. David O. Stine, Chaffey principal.

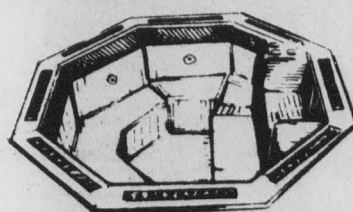

"We are very pleased to be working with Sunkist as an educational-industrial partner. Sunkist staff will be used as guest speakers in the classroom and teachers and students will tour the business facilities and 'shadow' key personnel," Stine said.

The primary purpose of the Adopt-A-School Program is to create a climate of involvement and interaction between business and school. "Our teachers and students need to know about life in the real business world," Stine said. Roger Dunlap, Chaffey High community resource department chairman, will coordinate the program with Sunkist personnel manager Sam Garcia.

Two other high schools in the Chaffey Joint Union High School District currently are participating in the Adopt-A-School Program. Montclair High School has been adopted by Doctors' Hospital of Montclair and Alta Loma High School has affiliated with General Telephone Co.
